Overall, the HVC X auditory motor neurons in swamp sparrows are very similar to the visual motor mirror neurons discovered in primates. Staying up there Once birds get up in the air, they use two main flying techniques to stay up. It has been hypothesized that the available frequency range is partitioned, and birds call so that overlap between different species in frequency and time is reduced. Tweet:WordtotheBird. However, when adult females are given androgen injections, their singing will increase to an almost male-like frequency. This suggests that these neurons are producing a corollary dischargewhich would allow for direct comparison of motor output and auditory input.
