Changing this culture will not be easy. In care environments, being a full partner involves taking responsibility for identifying problems and areas of waste, devising and implementing a plan for improvement, tracking improvement over time, and making necessary adjustments to realize established goals.

The growing attention of hospital boards to quality and safety issues reflects. Fortunately, a number of nursing associations have organized networks to support their membership and facilitate such opportunities: The American Association of Colleges of Nursing AACN conducts an expertise survey that is used to identify subject matter experts across topic areas within Nursing Leadership (Year Books) membership; it also maintains a list of nursing education experts. For managers, it emphasizes the importance of providing preceptors with positive and supportive experiences.
