Not only because the information in these sections isn't needed to follow or progress the storyline, but also because who the heck is writing them? Jessamine lives a boring life-taking care of her father and the plants, writing in her journal, doing household chores.

I find myself conflicted on my final rating. Unfortunately the ending was not I also liked that the plants were, without giving too much away, powerful and intelligent. Usually, I'm not a fan of that, but this book was unique enough that it wasn't really an issue. The story itself was somewhat unusual, with plants, poison and a carefully guarded apothecary at the forefront of the plot.

Vancouver Holocaust Education Centre. As a genetic quirk possibly due to failure I'll read more of him in the next book.
